Telling the time in English

In British English, we use past and to with 5 minute increments of time.

We use minutes to/past for increments of time between 5 minute divisions.

We only use the expression o'clock on the hour.

In everyday spoken English, we use the 12 hour clock. Through context, it is usually clear what time of day we are referring to.

We use the expression in the morning/afternoon/evening or at night to avoid misunderstandings.
